

MUMBAI JEWS

A documentary by Oren Rosenfeld and Michal Lee Sapir

A Holyland Productions film

Mumbai Jews

ONE-SENTENCE DESCRIPTION

A documentary that follows two Mumbai Jews, a Baghdadi scholar racing to preserve a vanishing architectural heritage and a Bene Israel businesswoman whose son joins the Israeli army, weaving together 2,000 years of Jewish past and present.

SYNOPSIS

Mumbai Jews is a documentary about the rich cultural tapestry of India's Jewish communities, told through the intertwined journeys of two people fighting for preservation. Dr. Shaul Sapir, a Mumbai-born Baghdadi Jew, returns to the city of his birth after 44 years in Israel to document its vanishing Jewish urban heritage - the magnificent synagogues built by the "Rothschilds of the East." His quest takes a turn when he discovers a long-lost photo album, donated by the Sassoon family to the British Museum, whose hidden clues lead him to the forgotten Sassoon houses scattered across the city. In parallel we meet Eddna Samuel, a member of the ancient Bene Israel community who runs a PR company, and whose roots in India span more than two millennia. Through her personal story, family history and lived experience, the film celebrates the unique story of Indian Jews - a community that flourished for centuries in harmony with its neighbors. When her son enlists in the Israeli army, she confronts the balance between her deep love for her Indian homeland and the pull of the Jewish homeland. With expert commentary, archival treasures and intimate access to synagogues and rituals, Mumbai Jews offers a look at a unique Jewish community shaped not by persecution but by peaceful coexistence, rich heritage and an enduring bond with India.
